

FIN 3300 Fall 2017	Areas for Improvement	Instructor's Strengths
1	Do more than just one example. Break things down into their parts and drill down the parts, don't just go through a really long process and just hope everyone makes it to the end. I know that asking a question to get the student thinking when they ask you is a good teaching tool but you just are not there yet. I suggest you stop doing that completely. Please, when someone asks you a question answer it and put it into the larger context of the material. You tend to create a lot of awkward silences by asking a question no one has the answer to and just waiting. Quit doing that. Assume your students know absolutely nothing because they don't.	You are really nice and I can tell you are getting better at teaching as time is going by.
2	The instructor needs to be more consistent with study guides, because the end of the course for the last quiz and test the instructor switched the format of the study guide, which made it difficult to study. The instructor is a very nonchalant person and when you ask questions he feels as if we should already know the answers to them. He is not very helpful when you don't understand new material and he expects his students to grasp the information very quickly. I believe the instructor needs work on his teaching and his patience.	This professor truly cares about our grades and how well we understand the material.
3	Hopefully becomes available fall & spring. Great teacher who makes the course easy, you just have to study and go to the tutor 2nd day of class.	Very understanding toward all students in the room.
	The chapters in the last few weeks of the semester were taught too quickly to understand which reflected in homework and on the quizzes and tests. Although this did not happen until the last two chapters, I would try to avoid showing only one example of each problem too quickly to students. I also felt that the professor was not fully prepared early on in the semester.	The instructor is very enthusiasm. His lessons were so much easier to remember. He was concerned about my progress in the course. He is my favorite professor in this semester.
	None he was a great professor and very helpful.	He knows what to do
	Nothing	challenged everyone to think critically and keep students engaged
	N/A	Explained the work good. Made it easy to learn the material.
